How does Priestley create drama using the Inspector's entrance and exit?

The Entrance

INTRODUCTION

- Describe the Inspector. How does Priestley present him to the audience? What are the general uses of the Inspector in the play? Link this to the entrance and exit.

enigmatic, mysterious, frightening, intimidating, authoritative, impressive, introduced as Inspector Goole (pun – connotations are?), communicates the moral and socialist voice of Priestley, promotes an egalitarian (equal) society, strong message to a middle class audience, used to create tension, expose the Birling family, omniscient, his identity always remains unknown, leaves the family in pieces and shattered.

Include quotations, insert them fluently. No need to analyse them too much here.

2. Describe the appearance of the Inspector and the symbolic meaning behind his attire.

Look at the stage directions, visually he is presented as..., the 'plain darkish suit' ... and analyse what they perhaps, symbolise. Quotations are analyses in depth.

This will take several paragraphs...

2. How is the Inspector introduced by Priestley? How do the stage directions (lighting) and the reactions of Birling and the family create fear of the Inspector? What does the Inspector disrupt? How does the historical context of the play enable the speech of Birling to be ironic, foolish and naïve? Why does Priestley use the Inspector to interrupt his speech?

look at the stage directions, the ring, the lighting (various interpretations), the turn-taking, the panic, the coolness of the Inspector in contrast with the Birlings and Gerald. Describe the atmosphere previous to his arrival (briefly) analyse some of Birling's early and ironic comments, mention 1945/1912 and its benefits for the playwright.

Why does Inspector Goole insert Birlings' speech before the arrival of the Inspector? What key things does he say and what do these suggest about the family? Why does Priestley introduce the Insp. at the key moment in Birling's speech? Why does he interrupt him? How is all of this dramatic?

EDNA'S ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE INSPECTOR

Ironically, Edna, the servant of the Birlings, opens the door to the Inspector and brings him into the house... Priestley clearly uses this as a clever dramatic moment... How does Priestley make use of this low status character? Explain the irony. Mention that she delivers the resounding line! Yet, she utters very few other words.
